

17. The maltings have a formidable effect on their surroundings, not least this section of High Street in the vicinity of the Station. The picket fence on the left is an attractive feature which might be extended further.

18. Maltings no's 3 and 4 enjoy a more sylvan setting in School Lane. Maltings no 7 immediately to the east has been destroyed through fire and subsequent demolition.

19. Mistley Station is a pretty building, the immediate surroundings of which have been attractively handled. Other landscaping ventures require further maintenance.

20. This house on the corner of School Lane, along with its frontage wall and mature trees, helps to re-establish the residential scale south of the railway bridge. A small house development in its grounds exhibits many attractive features.

21. James Terrace at the eastern end of High Street is a significant part of the development history of Mistley. Though it retains its slate roof and door cases, the terrace has lost all its original window details, a particular problem given its prominent setting.

22. The Anchor Inn and the new house next door are maintained under their weatherboarded facades. The loss of the chimneys to the original building is regrettable, and the printed concrete forecourt has an insistent quality not shared by its relative openness to the street.

23. A group of distinctive houses with classical detailing frame views of the ruinous Malting No 7. The house on the left retains many of its original features; its restoration and sympathetic consideration to its grounds and setting would be an enhancement to the Area.

24. Late Victorian and modern housing contribute to the character of California Road. Visible in the patched tarmac of the carriage way are glazed bricks, a feature of historic areas in the District and here used to define the gutter.

25. The Walls provides splendid views of the Stour estuary, filtered through attractive groups of trees. Mistley Place occupies the area to the left, and presents a frontage of almost continuous planting to The Walls and to New Road.

26. The Church of St Mary and St Michael is the focal point of the northern end of New Road. Its attractive churchyard with its prominent conifers, makes a pleasant group with the well-maintained sports facilities in this location.

27. Situated close to the confluence of various paths and rights, this survival of the former Mistley Hall is itself something of a focal point. Its brick elevations contain many attractive features, and the boundary wall is a prominent part of the Area.

28. The current Mistley Hall and its associated commercial buildings are set in mature grounds and make an attractive feature in this viewpoint from the entrance to Green Lane.
